

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to methods for treating neurogenic inflammation pain. The methods include administering an effective amount of a composition which includes a botulinum toxin component and a substance P component to a patient, thereby treating the neurogenic inflammation pain.